MOTHS OF WESTERN NORTH AMERICA

JERRY A. POWELL AND PAUL A. OPLER

Insects boast incredible diversity, and this book treats an important component of the western insect biota that has not been summarized before—moths and their plant relationships. There are about 8,000 named species of moths in our region, and although most are unnoticed by the public, many attract attention when their larvae create economic damage: eating holes in woolens, infesting stored foods, boring into apples, damaging crops and garden plants, or defoliating forests. In contrast to previous North American moth books, this volume discusses and illustrates about 25% of the species in every family, including the tiny species, making this the most comprehensive volume in its field. With this approach, it provides access to microlepidoptera study for biologists as well as amateur collectors. More than 2,500 color images of moths and immature stages are presented, and about 2,050 species, including virtually all moths of economic importance, are described and illustrated, summarizing their morphology, taxonomy, adult behavior, larval biology, and life cycles.

Jerry A. Powell, Professor of the Graduate School in the Department of Environmental Science, Policy, and Management at the University of California, Berkeley, and coauthor of California Insects.

Paul A. Opler, Professor in the Department of Bioagricultural Sciences and Pest Management at Colorado State University, Ft. Collins, is author of Peterson Guides to Western and Eastern Butterflies, among other books.
